Q: How to re-use model results from ModelBuilder to Modeling software? I have a model built in ArcMap 10.3.1. The results from the model are saved as a txt file. In another program (ArcGIS Pro) I have multiple flow models that are similar. I want to re-use the results from the model built in ArcMap 10.3.1. I have tried to import the model and data results into ArcGIS Pro, but the results are incorrect. Is there any way to re-use the result from ArcMap Model Builder?

A: If you want a proper tool to do this and have the ability to run the code with a license you can use the ISAToolpack. It does things like parcelize your layers to make them buildable and run your model and creates a text file with the resulting data. The linked to documentation I provided is no longer available unfortunately

Q: Does the sunlight come to earth and get dimmed by the ozone layer? While watching a documentary or hearing about a news, I hear that the sunlight comes to the earth and gets dimmed by the ozone layer. I want to understand the correct way of thinking about this. For a better intuition, I have created a very small image of an example (atmospheric layer is only 1 km and there is a point source of UV-light). Is the sunlight hitting on the ozone layer or the sunlight is getting dimmed because of the atmosphere? Because ozone is present in stratosphere, why it is not discussed when the sun light hits the earth directly?

Question: 1) Why the ozone layer should "filters" the solar radiation getting out of the earth? 2) Does the sunlight get dimmed by the ozone layer?

Note: The ozone layer is a thin layer of gas. Ozone has 4 chemical "flavors": Oxidant, Chlorine, Bromine, and Iodine.

A: It depends on the wavelength you are looking at and how your picture is made. When incoming UV light gets through the atmosphere, it changes as it passes from near vacuum to the air. The amount of light that gets through depends on wavelengths, but that is the point of our eyes. Our eyes are designed for visible light
